Edgar Allan Poe was born in 1809 in Boston, Massachusetts, of parents who were both struggling actors. After the death of his mother when he was only two, Poe was adopted by John Allan, a wealthy tobacco merchant who lived in Richmond, Virginia. Friends remember Poe as a clever and popular young man, but he was always haunted by poverty. He studied at the University of Virginia, but left because he didn't have enough money: he later joined the army in order to support himself. His stepfather sent him to West Point military academy in 1830, but Poe was forced to leave in disgrace. He was a young man with no family or home, no money and no qualifications. It was at this time that he turned to writing. Poe started writing poetry when he was a soldier and in the 1830s', he started writing short-stories. He won many prizes for his stories, but earned little money from them. In 1835 he got a job as editor of a newspaper in Richmond, and for the rest of his life he worked as a journalist and lecturer. As well as the horror and detective stories, he wrote poetry, comedy, satire and literary criticism. He became famous throughout America as a man of letters, but never grew rich or found happiness. He died, possibly of a heart attack, in Baltimore in 1849.
